Getting in front of the Camera

Being a photographer, I have heard every self-conscious statement that women can make before a session. Once they get into the studio, we have usually already met and they have gotten comfortable with me as their photographer. Getting in front of the camera can seem pretty intimidating but the doubts and fears all melt away once we take the first three shots. Women transform. They discover something within them that they never knew they had, or have forgotten. It's fierce and powerful.

We as women, forget to take care of ourselves. We forget to make time to just celebrate who we are. That is what I love about doing these sessions. I get to meet a lot of amazing women who just need a refresher. They are tired, and often times overworked. This is a day where you just get to come in and let your guard down, be pampered, have a great time, and just be yourself. True authenticity. We build friendships here.

Tips for Preparing for the Special Day.

1. If you color your hair, get root touch ups about a week before. Any hair trim needs to be done at the time.
2. Manicure/Pedicures are a great idea the day before your session. Please no dark or black polish. Either bare nails or freshly painted are encouraged.
3. Drink TONS of water beginning the day before your session.
4. Get plenty of sleep the night before. Tired eyes do not make great photos.
5. Arrive to the studio with clean dry hair and no makeup.
6. Don't argue with the sweetie the night before or morning of your session. Sad eyes don't go away.
7. Exfoliate dead skin cells the day before your session. It gives a nice even blemish-free slate for the make-up artist to do her best work.
8. Moisturize your face and body. This does wonders for your skin, making it glow for your shoot.
